Chapter 1 by GiniSmith

There was a scientist named Johnson. He had an assistant named Jeremy but he was very dummy. One day they do a poison or craziness, Johnson says to Jeremy to pass him the poison but there was a banana rind on the floor. Jeremy finds it and was running to give him the poison.

Chapter 2 by Luke Meyers

Johnson called out, "Good God, look out man! Don't you see that banana rind there on the floor? You're about to slip on it and spill that poison all over my creation!"

"Yes, Dr. Johnson! Sorry, Dr. Johnson!" Jeremy stopped running and instead began to crawl slowly and carefully on all fours. Unfortunately, to do this he had to place the poison in his mouth, which of course caused him to die and fall directly on the banana rind.

Chapter 3 by intellikat

The funeral was a very solemn affair, attended by a great number of dummies. When the priest asked if anyone wished to come forward and say anything about Jeremy, one dummy cousin ran forward toward the altar, not seeing another banana rind on the floor.

Chapter 4 by 🎵 Ava 🎵

He slipped and fell right into the coffin with Jeremy. This made it a lot easier for everyone attending the funeral because now they didn't have to go to another service for another dummy. Only one person wanted to come forward to say something about the dummies, and he happened to be Jeremy's dummy father. As he walked forward, he chuckled and picked up the banana peel. He lifted it above his head, showing it to everyone, and then he put it in his mouth, swallowing it with one gulp. Everyone that was there at the funeral looked at him and his father looked around at everyone before dropping the banana peel.
